

IRISH COLLECTIONS AT THE NEWBERRY

Introduction

The Newberry holds several thousand items relating to Irish and Irish-American history and literature. There is an abundance of material on all key events, movements and individuals associated with Irish history from the seventeenth to the twentieth century, though the library's particular strength is in the nineteenth century. Researchers with an interest in military and political history are particularly well catered for, as are those concerned with the Irish literary tradition. There is also a strong collection relating to Irish-America, particularly focused on the Chicago area, and the library has numerous resources which are invaluable to all those with an interest in genealogy.

Scholars interested in Irish poetry, literature and drama will find a wealth of primary and secondary material. There are a substantial number of books by and about individuals including Dion Boucicault (1820-1890), author of The Shaughraun and The Colleen Bawn; Richard Brinsley Sheridan (1854-1900), best known for his plays The Rivals and School for Scandal, and Oscar Wilde (1854-1900), poet, playwright and wit. The writers associated with the Celtic Revival of the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries are also well represented with publications by the poet and playwright W.B. Yeats (1865-1939); J.M. Synge (1871-1909), author of The Playboy of the Western World and Riders to the Sea; George Russell (AE) (1867-1935), editor, poet and artist; Seán O'Casey, (1880-1964) author of The Shadow of a Gunman, Juno and the Paycock and The Plough and Stars; and Lady Gregory (1852-1932), best known for her re-workings of Irish folklore and mythological tales, and founder, with Yeats, Synge, AE and Edward Martyn, of the Abbey Theatre. The library has a number of first and rare editions alongside some copies of works signed by the author. These included many first editions, particularly American editions, of the works of James Joyce (1882-1941) and Samuel Beckett (1906-1989) and also a copy of Company autographed by Beckett.

In the seventeenth-century collection there are many texts that focus on the 1641 Rebellion, Oliver Cromwell's (1599-1658) campaign in Ireland in the 1640s and Thomas Wentworth (1593-1641), 1st Earl of Strafford and Lord Deputy of Ireland in the 1630s. There are a number of books which are concerned with the Jacobite/Williamite war of 1689-91. The most significant of these are a series of accounts and recollections published in the 1690s, including An Exact Account of the Total Defeat of the Irish Army at Antrim [Aughrim] in... 1691 and a collection of seventeenth-century accounts, published in the mid-nineteenth century, which include, among other things, descriptions of the Battle of the Boyne and the Siege of Derry.

The eighteenth-century collection covers a range of topics including the Penal Laws, Wood's half-pence controversy, the Volunteers and Free Trade. There are also significant holdings by and about Jonathan Swift (1667-1745), politician, novelist and Dean of St Patrick's Cathedral. The publications relating to Swift include copies of Gulliver's Travels; Directions to Servants; and A Tale of a Tub. There are a number of texts relating to the 1798 and 1803 Rebellions, including books by the Irish Republicans Theobald Wolfe Tone (1763-1798), Thomas Addis Emmet (1764-1827) and Robert Emmet (1778-1803). There are copies of many Acts passed by the Irish Parliament or by the British Parliament about Ireland which date from the sixteenth century through to the end of the eighteenth century. There is also material concerned with the Act of Union of 1800 which united the parliaments of Britain and Ireland. This includes a number of speeches and pamphlets including Lord Minto's speech on the Act in 1799, an address to the people of Ireland against Union by 'A friend to Ireland' and the periodical The Anti-Union which was published in Dublin in 1796-7.

The nineteenth-century collection is primarily concerned with land rights, agrarian outrages, political and religious issues and contains several pamphlets by politician and founder of the Catholic Association and the Repeal Association, Daniel O'Connell (1775-1847). There is a considerable secondary collection relating to the Great Famine of the 1840s. In addition to this, those interested in conducting research on their ancestors who left Ireland during, and after, the Famine will find many resources to assist their search in the library. The Home Rule campaign of the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth century is well represented, as are many of the events, organisations and individuals related to it including the Land War of 1879-1881 and the Land League. In the library's collection of manuscripts there are a small number of letters from leading Irish nationalists including the leaders of the Irish Parliamentary Party, Charles Stewart

Parnell (1846-1891), John Dillon (1851-1927) and John Finerty, a leading Irish nationalist in Chicago. These letters are primarily to or about the Mayor of Chicago, Carter Harrison.

There is a strong collection of nineteenth-century journals and newspapers. Not all are complete runs, but the library has a significant number of issues of many, including the Dublin Penny Journal, the Irish Penny Journal, the Illustrated Dublin Journal, Duffy's Hibernian Magazine and Irish Fireside. The library holds a complete run of Fáinne an Lae, an influential bi-lingual newspaper published between 1898 and 1900 as part of the Gaelic Revival. While a substantial portion of the periodical collection relates to nationalist and Catholic material, there are also a number of publications that represent unionist and Protestant perspectives, including the Williamite Magazine or Protestant's Advocate for Civil and Religious Liberty, the Watchman, or Protestant Guardian and the Protestant Penny Magazine, which were all published in Dublin during the 1820s and 1830s. The library also has some important twentieth-century periodicals including The Dublin Magazine of the 1940s and 1950s and the popular satirical illustrated magazine Dublin Opinion (1922-1968).

There are also holdings of many Irish and Irish-American newspapers and periodicals, including John Mitchel's The Citizen, James McMaster's (New York) Freeman's Journal and the Boston Pilot, edited by John Boyle O'Reilly. An American perspective on Ireland and the Irish is also represented in the collection. The library holds a range of American, and particularly Chicago-based magazines, newspapers and journals, including the Chicago Tribune and the Chicago Daily News, which frequently commented on the Irish in America and the Irish in Ireland. This is particularly obvious in publications such as America, a newspaper published in Chicago in the late 1880s which delighted in editorials and illustrations portraying the Irish as an untrustworthy, unlawful and violent race. Alongside the periodicals the library has many books which illuminate Irish Chicago. Some of the most noteworthy include those by and about the journalist and creator of 'Mr Dooley', Peter Finlay Dunne, and Charles Ffrench's Biographical History of the American Irish in Chicago (1897). In addition, the library holds the papers of a number of Irish-Americans who rose to prominence in Chicago; most notably the papers of journalist and founder of the Chicago Daily News, Melville E. Stone (1848-1929); the reporter and author of the Studs Lonigan trilogy and the Danny O'Neill novels, James T. Farrell (1904-1979) and those of the journalist and war correspondent Robert R. Casey (1890-1962).

Scholars who wish to conduct genealogical research are well served by a large secondary collection of monographs relating to Irish history, genealogical research, immigration both general and region specific. The library also has access to useful research tools such as Griffith's Valuation of 1846 and a number of almanacs, registers and magazines relating to Dublin dating from the mid-eighteenth century to the mid-twentieth century, which includes a full run of Pettigrew and Oulton's Dublin Almanac (1834-1848).

The library has a strong collection of eighteenth- and nineteenth-century Antiquarian works, in addition to a considerable number of histories of Ireland and guides to Ireland from the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The histories include those by James Ware, Edmund Spenser and Edmund Campion. The manuscript collection contains a number of relevant holdings including papers relating to Christopher Colles (1738-1816); a civil engineer who did pioneering work with highway planning, the development of the telegraph, and inland navigation in New York State. In addition to several editions of Moore's Irish Melodies and a collection of books on Irish music by Chief Francis O'Neill, the library has a substantial number of musical scores relating to Ireland.

Within its Irish collection the Newberry Library houses over three hundred Irish language related texts which were published from the seventeenth to the twentieth century. The library holds a number of Irish language bibles and has the first Irish translation of the New Testament that was given by Queen Elizabeth to a family in Ireland in 1602. Other religious material in Irish include homilies, parts of a seventeenth-century catechism by Bonaventura O'Hussey and a 1639 catechism which was the first book published in Roman type in the Irish language.

1. Irish History, Civilization, Anthropology, and Archaeology

One of the most complete aspects of the Newberry's Irish history collection are the many different "Histories" of Ireland dating back to a 1633 collection of histories by James Ware, Edmund Spenser, and Edmund Campion (all bound together), and various other histories running through the 20th century. The library also holds a number of different editions of James Ware's history and a few of his other publications. A number of the 19th and 20th century histories are illustrated. In addition to the histories of Ireland, there are various 17th century publications surrounding Cromwell's campaign against the Irish and 18th century publications by different noblemen reflecting on the wars in Ireland. There is also a notable gathering of 18th century antiquarian works addressing life in ancient Ireland, and a number of documents related to military history.

2. Irish Language Texts

The Newberry has over three hundred Irish language texts. The most impressive aspect of the Irish language holdings is the Irish language Bibles. The Newberry has the first Irish translation of the New Testament, which was given by Queen Elizabeth in 1602 to a family in Ireland. Building on this historically significant bible are four more 17th century Bibles, in which are included the Bedell translation, and Irish language Bibles from the 18th and 19th century. Additionally, the library has a number of different religious Irish language materials including homilies, parts of of 17th century Bonaventura O'Hussey catechism, and a 1639 Catechism that was the first book in the Irish language printed in Roman type.

Beyond the collection of Bibles and catechisms, the library also holds an extensive collection of reproductions of manuscripts from the Royal Irish Academy in Dublin.

Among the more contemporary Irish language texts is a report in Irish and English on the Feast of St. Patrick, 1896, at St. Thomas' parish in Chicago, various Irish language primers, Irish language poetry and stories, and popular tales translated into Irish.

3. Irish Americans

The Newberry's Irish-American related holdings contain various resources and guides relating Irish genealogy and family history dating back to the mid 19th century. The library holdings also contain a handful of Irish-American periodicals, such as The Journal of the American-Irish Historical Society, The Citizen, and New-York Freeman's Journal and Catholic Register. Additionally, the library holds collections of two notable Chicago Irish-American authors. One is a collection of books by Finnely Peter Dunne, editor of The Chicago Evening Post and inventor of the comedic character Mr. Dooley. The other is a collection of books by James T. Farrell, a reporter and novelist who wrote about Chicago's south side Irish population. Notably, the library also has, in its manuscripts holdings, the papers of James T. Farrell. Lastly, the library has two songbooks of Irish/Irish-American folk song from the 19th century.
